HOLZHAUSENSTRASSE
RAUMINSTALLATION, OFFENBACH, 2012

Holzhausenstraße is the first of two walk-in club sculptures conceived and built by the Offenbach cultural collective GetRich. YRD.Works were part of the collective. The spatial installation consisted of several tonnes of oriented strand board and extended over more than 300 square metres in a vacant warehouse. A particular feature were the labyrinthine corridors in which visitors could lose their sense of space and time during the music performances.
After the raves GetRich had previously organised, Holzhausenstraße was the first place the collective activated over a longer period: on several nights, people danced to techno inside the sculpture. It was built without a budget from within a circle of friends. For the second club sculpture, Holzhausen, a new project in the same warehouse, Holzhausenstraße was demolished and its material reused.
