WHITE OUT

INTERVENTION / SKULPTUR / AKTION, FRANKFURT, 2018

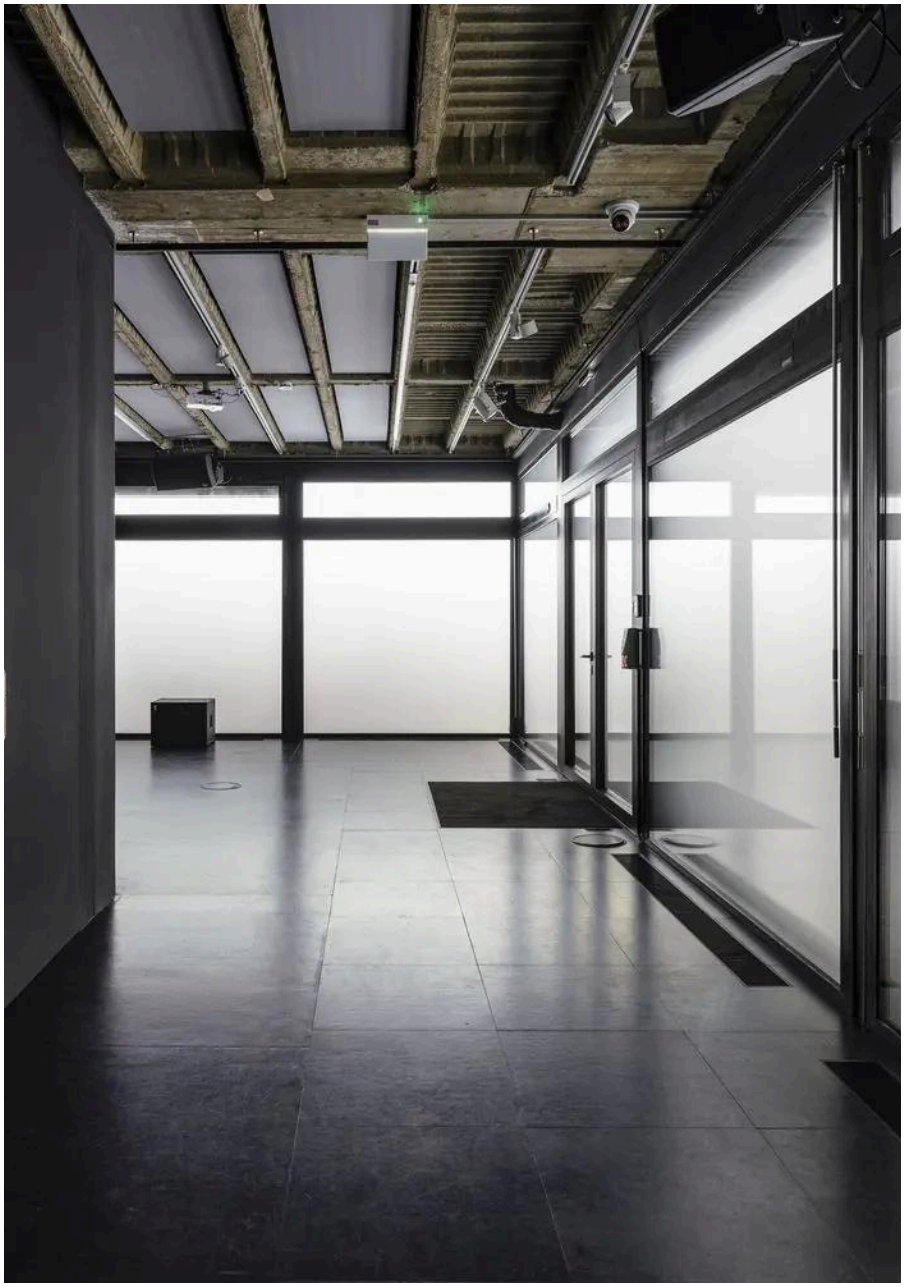

White Out (2018) Frankfurt

The spatial installation White Out was on view at the Saasfee-Pavillon in Frankfurt from 15 November to 6 December 2018 as part of LoadNext, a four-part collaboration between the Saasfee-Pavillon and the Kressmann-Halle Offenbach. "Whiteout" describes a meteorological phenomenon that can be observed in high mountains and polar regions. When snow-covered surfaces meet sunlight muted by fog, a specific brightness arises that is called a whiteout. Using artificial techniques, YRD.Works imitated this particular light condition in an expansive installation in the exhibition.

The collective's White Out confronted visitors as a spatial intervention that profoundly changed the glazed, light-flooded character of the Saasfee-Pavillon. With a six-metre-high outer cladding, YRD.Works encased the pavilion's glass front and built an external corridor that isolated the exhibition space from its surroundings, the park. The one-metre-wide passage, closed to visitors, was artificially lit and filled with fog, clouding the view of its interior.

Much like a diorama, an artificial atmosphere prevailed in which, however, nothing concrete was visible. Exposed structural elements within the fogged corridor only hinted at a spatial dimension in places. The result was a place detached from its temporal and spatial coordinates that challenged visitors with its isolated emptiness. Natural influences from the surroundings such as seasons or weather were deliberately negated in White Out in favour of a static, closed spatial situation.

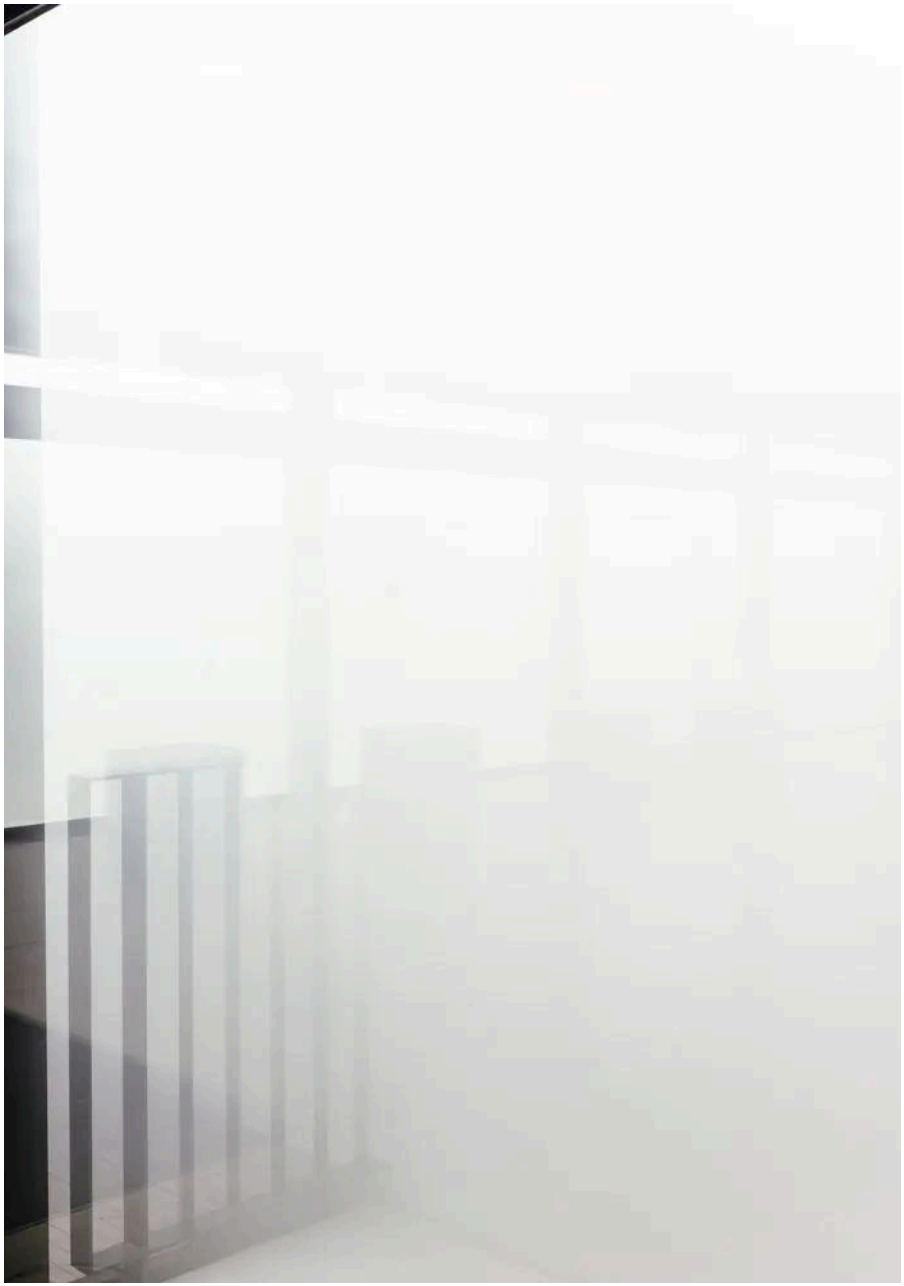

On two dates during the exhibition, performances by the artist duo BBB_ and the dancer Frances Chiaverini took place, intensifying the spatial character of White Out.
