Bread Dispenser (2021) Frankfurt

In spring 2021, YRD.Works presented the work Bread Dispenser at punktumweg Galerie in Frankfurt. Over a period of ten days, the collective baked 50 sourdough loaves every day. In the months leading up to the project, the artists had studied the fundamentals of this ancient craft intensively — through conversations with experts and trial bakes using their recipes — and learned to bake bread.

For the action itself, YRD.Works divided the gallery with drywall partitions, creating a second area next to the actual exhibition space that the public could not see. This hidden back room was equipped with a large oven, a cold room and other equipment; here, the loaves were baked during the gallery's opening hours. Because of the spatial separation, however, visitors could only sense the baking process through the sounds and smells coming from the temporary bakery. Unlike the bakehouse, the walk-in exhibition space appeared empty and, with its white walls and cool neon light, almost sterile. At its centre was a dispenser set into the wall, whose dark chute led directly into the hidden bakery. At the push of a button, visitors could trigger a process that sent one freshly baked loaf sliding down the chute from the bakehouse into the gallery. The procedure recalled the bread machines of a well-known discount supermarket and stood in stark contrast to the high-quality, handmade food that could be taken from the hatch.

The concept of the exhibition aimed to open the project beyond the conventional art space and to create a charitable space accessible to everyone: a large shop window facing the street drew the attention of passers-by and residents to Bread Dispenser. Each person was allowed to take one freshly baked, often still oven-warm loaf home for free each day.
